ASPIRE Intern Blog #11

Post-production has officially arrived, and while it's always a little strange when the chaos of production week comes to an end, it's been lovely having excuses to see everyone again! The documentary premiere was a really lovely opportunity to catch up, relive some memories and see just how excited and supportive everyone still is. It's a nice reminder that even when the show is over, the ASPIRE family sticks around.

This year has been my first experience with the Young Actors Program (YAP), as well as our first year running a YAP design group, and it's been so lovely seeing everything come together.

One of my favourite parts has been watching the students grow. We started the year with a fairly quiet group who were still finding their feet, and now we have a very rambunctious group of friends who have well and truly come out of their shells. Whether they were trying performing or design for the first time, or building the confidence to share their ideas, it's been fantastic watching them give things a go.

Junior Theatre Makers has been another highlight, particularly because I got to work with the group to create an original script and then watch them bring it to life on stage.

The group worked incredibly hard, and I was genuinely impressed by how quickly they picked up their lines and brought their characters to life. Of course, performance day had a few bumps along the way, because apparently theatre can never just let us have a completely stress-free experience. But what stood out most was how well the students supported each other and worked through the challenges.

We ended up having a fantastic day, a great performance and plenty of laughs. I couldn't be prouder of what they achieved.

And just like that, another round of projects comes to an end. It's been so rewarding watching these groups grow, create and find their confidence, and I'm very grateful to have been part of it all.

An inspired Charlotte.
